Commentary

During the first quarter 2023, the Axiom International Equity Strategy ("Strategy") outperformed the MSCI ACWI ex USA Index ("Index") net of fees. The Strategy has outperformed the Index on a net of fees basis over 3-year, 5-year, 10-year, and since inception periods.

Growth stock premiums have begun rebounding from last year's sell-down as the outlook for developed market GDP growth and inflation continues to moderate. We expect this trend to continue as central banks become more cautious and data-dependent in their monetary policy decisions. Our stocks were resilient to the financial sector turmoil this quarter which resulted, in part, from the recent rapid expansion of the money supply and then the equally rapid rate hikes. The notable acceleration in the adoption of AI and machine learning technologies, as well as the ongoing investment in automation in response to persistent labor tightness, all suggest an important new wave of innovation and growth investment opportunities.

The top performing sector on a relative basis during the first quarter was consumer discretionary, due to positive performance from MercadoLibre, which is seeing earnings upside amid an improving competitive landscape in its key Brazilian market, coupled with a more rationale pricing environment. LVMH, and Hermes were also top performers in the sector. Information technology, due to top performing stock in the portfolio NVIDIA, and health care also positively contributed to performance. Financials was the only relative detracting sector for the quarter.

The highest contributing region on a relative basis for the quarter was Europe ex UK, again due to strong performance from LVMH, which was driven by evidence of sustained luxury goods demand in developed markets as well as a recovery in Chinese consumption activity, and Hermes. Latin America was a detractor for the quarter.

From an individual stock perspective, the highest relative contributors for the quarter were NVIDIA, which earns over two-thirds of its revenues in Asia, MercadoLibre, LVMH, Baidu, which is benefitting from an advertising rebound in China as the economy emerges from strict 'COVID zero' policies, and Hermes. The largest detractors on a relative basis were Alibaba, AIA Group, Canadian National Railway, Toronto-Dominion Bank, and DBS Group.

Dynamic growth stocks have materially outperformed value stocks globally since the global financial crisis, now nearly 15 years ago, notwithstanding periodic growth-value rotations. The structural outperformance of growth equities (see Axiom's 4Ds webinar) appears to be reasserting itself as inflation continues to moderate and earnings growth becomes increasingly scarce again, further supporting growth stock returns. Last year's severe growth stock valuation correction, heavily driven by the inflation/interest rate cycle, which is now cresting, has created dislocations and opportunity for investors who have been seeking to reinforce their participation in growth equities. We firmly believe that growth stocks offer the best opportunities for long-term capital appreciation, especially in a challenging macroeconomic environment, where the subset of winners becomes narrower. With the US rate cycle expected to reach a peak in the next few months, the US dollar also appears to be in a downtrend, having touched 25-year highs last year, possibly providing further performance tailwinds to global growth stocks, including potentially in emerging markets. Please see Axiom's new white paper available on our website regarding why we believe it is currently an attractive time to be selecting growth stocks in emerging markets. Axiom's long-term outperformance is a testament to our disciplined and rigorous approach to investing as well as our commitment to staying focused on our core competence: finding and investing in the best dynamically growing companies in the world.
